AN OLD TRICK

Marked Coins Caught a Law-Breaker.

Japanese in Jail for Selling Liquor
Without a License—Gambling Games.

Special Police Officer H. J. Hanrahan made a trip to Iwilei last night in the regular discharge of his duties. As a rule he makes it a point to give this interesting locality a visit every night. His trips generally result in the punishment of some wrong-doer or another. An Advertiser reporter accompanied the industrious officer.

The Yoshiwara was first visited. The present condition of this place reflects great credit on the Police Department. It is kept perfectly clean and orderly and the police are always on the lookout to see that the law is obeyed in all particulars.

The whole premises were inspected, and wherever procurers were found they were immediately ordered out; if they showed any unwillingness to depart they were assisted in making their exit. The police have no sympathy with this degraded class of men, and make it very warm for them whenever occasion so demands.

The Chinese wash-houses were next approached. These were in total darkness except for the occasional faint glimmer of a light through dirty and half-covered windows. The approach had to be very carefully made. Slowly the officer moved along back of the long, low, dilapidated row of shacks. Suddenly he paused and listened. The sound of money jingling could be plainly heard in one of the rooms. By going around through the door of an adjoining apartment the room where the gambling was going on was reached. Quick as a flash Hanrahan burst through the door and pounced upon a number of Chinese gambling at a table. He scattered them right and left, sweeping the dominoes on to the floor. One sly Celestial, however, had grabbed the money as soon as the officer entered, and escaped with it out of a back door.

No sooner had this game been broken up than the lights in a dozen other similar places went out, and when they were visited the Chinese had just tumbled in to their bunks and were apparently sound asleep.

Hanrahan was particularly anxious to secure a certain Japanese in Iwilei who has been selling liquor without a license for some time, and who, by his careful methods, almost defied capture.

Marking a half-dollar and a ten-cent piece, Hanrahan gave them to a French woman, instructing her to go to his place and buy two bottles of beer. The woman obeyed and the Japanese sold her the beer, receiving the marked coins over the counter in exchange for the liquor. No sooner had the woman left the place than Hanrahan had the Japanese under arrest. Summoning a policeman on duty in Iwilei, the special officer gave the prisoner in his charge and proceeded himself to examine the till, finding therein the marked coins. Beer was found in abundance. There were ten bottles on ice, a barrel of bottled beer in the living apartment beneath a pile of clothes, and a case of sake under the bed.

The patrol was telephoned and the prisoner, the sake, the cold beer, the barrel of beer, the contents of the till, the two bottles of beer sold to the French woman, and the marked coins were all taken to the police station.

The Japanese registered as Mashimoto. His case comes up this morning.

AN EXCURSION ON HILO'S RAILROAD

Sunday School Picnic Affords a Novel Sensation for Residents of Hawaii.

It was a success, an unqualified success—the first railroad excursion out of Hilo, says the Hilo Tribune. The day was perfect. Superintendent Lambert had transformed flat cars into very comfortable coaches with tarpaulin covers and seats for sixty persons to each car. Promptly on time about one hundred children, and nearly as many more of their friends, moved out from Waiakea station. To many of the children this was their first ride on a railroad, and it was therefore a novel experience. To many others to whom railroad excursions were no novelty, the fact that Hilo at last had a railroad and that an excursion was now a possibility, made the occasion one of delight. The run through the woods was a constant scene of surprise, the roadbed making a narrow lane, walled in on each side by tropical foliage. The run to nine miles occupied about twenty-five minutes, and was made safely and pleasantly, the roadbed being in excellent condition and the cars running very smoothly. At the terminus of the road the excursionists left the car for a ramble of half an hour, which passed pleasantly and quickly. The return trip was made on schedule time, the train reaching Waiakea station at 11:30. The excursionists were speedily transferred to Coconut Island the ferryage of the entire party taking only a little more than half an hour. Soon scores of bathers were in the water, and the fun was fast and furious. The call to luncheon at 1 o'clock brought the small boy and girl reluctantly out of the water, for the average Hilo boy likes to eat even better than he does to swim. The tables were loaded down with good things and they began to speedily disappear, for the Hilo small boy's appetite is notorious, and the Oahu ozone had given it added power. At the end of a half hour the small boy looked like a stuffed turkey, and moved like Mark Twain's "Jumping Frog of Calaveras," which had been loaded with shot. One urchin leaning against a table, looked longingly at the food, while he held one hand on his stomach, was heard to say: "Gee! but I'm full, but I'll eat one more sandwich or bust!" After "all did eat and were filled," there were the traditional "twelve baskets of fragments."

Games, bathing and a "grand good time" filled the afternoon. Not an accident, nor the least "unpleasantness" marred the day. It was one of pure unalloyed pleasure to both old and young. Much of the credit of this successful outing is due to the efficient committee in charge, Messdames Terry, Abbey and Irwin and Miss Hitchcock, and Messrs. Cruzan, Terry, I. U. Smith and McTaggart. To the careful management of Superintendent Lambert, the conductor and engineer the very successful railroad excursion is due.

Coins of quaint and obsolete design and almost forgotten coinage have begun to circulate in some of the worst famine-stricken districts of India. Some of these have reposed for 200 years beneath a family tree. The modern native of India has no more faith in the security of banks than his great-grandfather had. He invests his savings in jewelry, or hides his spare rupees in a bank of his own—usually a brass pot buried under a tree. Before he dies, he imparts the knowledge of its whereabouts to his sons, who in turn deposit their savings in the same hiding place. When a Hindoo dies suddenly, his "pot" is diligently searched for by his relatives, but the search is often fruitless. After the Mahomedan Empire began to wane, each petty chief and Rajahette coined his own rupee, and put his individual variation on value and weight. Some of these designs are very curious, though most of them bear, in addition to the eccentric fancy of the native who struck them, the name and titles of the reigning emperor.

GRANDSON OF NAPOLEON'S MARSHAL MEETS A SCION OF ROMANOFF RULERS

THE real live Count had an adventure with Emil Ney the other day that nearly wrecked his nerves. The Count on his arrival told of a Russian diplomatic connection, and, as is well-known, Emil Ney cherishes the pleasant thought that he is a grandson of Napoleon's greatest Marshal. He also understands himself to be in the secret service of some Government or other, and is ever on the lookout for a track which he can sleuth.

Saturday the two distinguished men came face to face in front of the Hawaiian Hotel. As soon as Ney saw the Count he stopped, braced up stiffly, made a hypnotic pass in the air and shrieked:

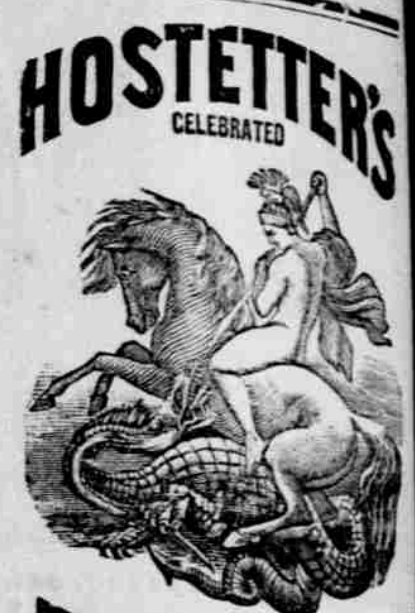

"At last! At last!"

The Count blanched but said nothing.

"Tracked! Trapped!" shouted Ney again. "The hour has come and the man is here. I have followed your trail day and night for years. Stop! Hear me out! You are no Count; you are a barber. One word and I'll—"

"Ze man ees insane; he is savvadree; gendarme, gendarme!" yelled the Count, and the noblesman from Russia inconspicuously fled, leaving Ney in a dramatic attitude, albeit somewhat unsteady on his legs, and with an unfinished promise on his lips to "expose the Count to the world."

It is understood that an affair of honor is now impending providing that each scion of a noble family can convince himself that the other is a gentleman.

This most desirable fabric we import direct from Japan, and the number of good qualities it possesses is astonishing. In spite of its extreme thinness its strength is remarkable. It makes one of the daintiest of evening dresses.

There are no two of these alike in any respect, and any lady wanting a really chic and up to date cape should see these at once; they are so few and so desirable that they will not last long.
